The march of General Sherman through Georgia is creating a perfect panic in Dixie. His army moves a wide swath, advancing in four columns, and parallel roads to its right and left by Major-General Sherman, who is led by Major-General Howard. The point of concentration as the objective of the movement is not yet developed. If no resistance is offered, or if supplies on the route are not concentrated for the use of the enemy, no supply is taken except such as is necessary to support our army. Private property is scrupulously spared, but horses and mules and able-bodied slaves are taken as far as needed. The Richmond papers, though putting on a defiant air, cannot conceal their anxiety. The Sentinel of the 21st feels uneasy from apprehension that the Georgians will not exhibit a spirit and devotion suitable to the occasion, and because they may show the self-sacrifice and courage demanded by the necessity that is upon them. The Whig thinks Sherman should be caught in a trap from which there will be no possible escape for him. The Dispatch expects to hear from him at Augusta, and the Enquirer calls loudly for legislation to destroy the traps before Sherman marches from field to field, from house to house, and from city to city, and reaches the coast, leaving Georgia devastated like the Palatinate. If therefore, his supplies are not cut off, he will march to the Atlantic, and return again in the Spring to complete the raid. The rebel general Gustavus Franklin also thinks this march will be timed to co-operate with a grand attack upon their city. We shall soon have Grant and Sherman and Sheridan all pounding away upon the shell of the Confederacy.

There are symptoms of returning sense in the Confederate Congress. There is talk there of conciliation and of "the Union of the South." It is true that these symptoms are not very strong, but they are premonitory of a change. And it is high time the Southern Quixotic madness, which has carried away the understandings of so many credulous and simple-minded Sancho Panza's, should attract the attention of a priest and barber, as related in the veritable life and exploits of Corvantes' Don Quixote de la Mancha, or some companion friend of order and good government, through whose agency the spell may be broken, the misguided Sanchez return to their Teresa's, and resume their various industrial and laudable pursuits, free from the tumult and dangers ever incident to a mass of inferior, of high-toned and unscrupulous cavalry. The Sancho Panza's, in an unguarded hour, gave ear to 5 to 5 new madmen, the Don Quixotes, and were induced to follow in the lead of mailed knights in search of a dragon, who had been constantly harassing them, and about a hundred of the red men, women and children ate and died from the effects. We do not see how this proceeding can be justified, even under the most aggravating circumstances.

An old whaling Captain at OH City, Pa., says as his theory of the origin of petroleum that it comes from large depots of whales, which we might think when the flood abated, and intervening convulsions of nature have since covered them up. Then petroleum is a fish oil, or "a whale's fat."

A man was arrested and tried in New Fairfield, Conn., some weeks since for an attempt to "kiss, hug and tickle" (so the indictment read) a certain woman. The man demurred to the "soft importunity." So the case has "gone up," and we suppose will go through all the courts.

General C. Bryant, at the late celebration in honor of his seventeenth birthday, gave Shakespeare credit for the lines written by Wordsworth:

There was no news brought up by passengers on the Nashville train last evening. This perfect confidence manifested in Gen. Thomas's command as to his ability to counteract the movements of Hood, and heavy reinforcements are making their way rapidly down the Nashville railroad, including McCook's and Waukin's brigades of cavalry.

Hood's army still threatens Columbia, and a considerable amount of skirmishing daily occurs between the two hostile lines. It is presumed that Hood will make an effort to move into East Tennessee. Such generalship would prove extremely disastrous to him, as the army under Gen. Steedman, at Chattanooga, would be such an attack him on the flank while Thomas engaged him in front. It is evident that Hood is at a loss what to do, as he can neither advance nor retreat without surmounting serious obstacles. It is very probable that battle will be fought in the vicinity of Columbia before many days. The rebels are growing desperate, and it would be well to stake upon the throwing of the whole lot.

General Johnson will be evacuated by General Thomas, as, under the existing state of affairs, the place is of but little military importance. Prudence demands that the force now holding it should be concentrated with the main army, to prevent the possibility of being cut off from support and forced into a surrender. Thomas is abundantly able to cope with Hood, although we would not be surprised to hear of his having evacuated Columbia and concentrated his forces at Franklin. The latter place is strongly fortified, and our army could fight to great advantage there; and, if the rebels should attack and meet with defeat, the route would be more complete, as we would have them further from a wide circle.

REBEL SPIES ARRESTED IN PENNSYLVANIA.

THE PITTSBURG CHRONICLE says: "A day or two since three suspicious characters entered the Cumberland and Tennessee rivers, with dispatches from Capt. Cutler, in command of a mounted expedition sent out from Clarksville and Fort Donelson, informing Col. Smith that on Saturday afternoon he attacked a large force of guerrillas under Col. Hawkins, and, after a brisk skirmish, routed them. The dispatch was written in greatest haste, and no particulars given. It is presumed that the Captain will follow up his advantage, and either capture or drive the outlaws south of the Tennessee."

THANKSGIVING.—A letter from Versailles, Ky., says: Thanksgiving day was appropriately observed here. The citizens desiring to give some expression of their respect for Capt. Gains and his men, who have been stationed here for several weeks and deported themselves so well, provided a sumptuous dinner for them at the court-house. Beef, lamb, turkey, chicken, oysters, pies, custards, cakes, and everything good on the table. The ladies, who are always first in every good work, were present to see that everything was in order and in abundance. It was to the soldiers a feast of fat things which all seemed ready to enjoy.

ACCIDENT TO AN ACTOR.—On Thursday night an accident occurred on the stage of the Varieties Theatre, St. Louis, by which one of the actors was injured. Dan Holt and Billy Hart were performing some of their Edithian drolleries which required the use of a pistol. Holt was pointing the weapon at Dan's head, and Dan dashed him to shoot. He did shoot, as the business of the piece required, but, unfortunately, his aim was needlessly true, and the wad or whatever other substance the pistol was loaded with struck Dan on the side of the head, cutting it quite severely.

THE FAIR.—The Fair, at the Varieties Theatre, St. Louis, by which one of the actors was injured. Dan Holt and Billy Hart were performing some of their Edithian drolleries which required the use of a pistol. Holt was pointing the weapon at Dan's head, and Dan dashed him to shoot. He did shoot, as the business of the piece required, but, unfortunately, his aim was needlessly true, and the wad or whatever other substance the pistol was loaded with struck Dan on the side of the head, cutting it quite severely.
